Many Cases Reported in French Court Criminal Records.

The remarkable studies in somnambu lism and in the unlimited power of suggestion which have been carried out at Nancy open up another and a more serions set of questions toneung the relations between hypnotism and crime, says the Saturday Review, These questions may be considered under three heads:

1. The observed phenomena of somnambulism (which is a hypnotic condition) show that somnambulists may unconsciously but spontaneously commit unlawful acts of which they have no knowledge and recollection when awake. In such cases, although really irresponsible and ignorant of what they have done they may be held guilty and punished ac-A case illustrating this point is the

A case injustrating this point is the Affaire L. R. (Lor-ei-Cher, 18:3). A servant girl was accused of having robbed her mistress, and was sent to prison. It turned out that she had been accustomed to be hypnotized by a doctor: he recognized her in prison and was al-lowed to hypnotize her again as an experiment.

In the hypnotic state she at once recollected having moved the missing things in order to put them in a safer place. She described the place to the judge, who found them in the spot precisely according to her description, and she was immediately released.

For shooting at his mistress he was tried at the Palais de Justice. Lorrin capitivated the jurymen by his poetical appearance, and his advocate fairly "fetched" them when he recited some of the young man's verses addressed to his inamovata after he had begun to suspect her fidelity, in which, with the usual hyperboles, he declared he could not live without her, and that one day he would be found hanging up behind the door.

The memiers of the jury were so touched with the proof of the accused's poetic affliction that they gave a verdict of "acquittal," although they could not extract the two balls, which still remain in his cranium. His poetry, however, saved is crantum. His poetry, however, saved him:

The same jury were in a forgiving frame of mind all day. Subsequently they had before them a "barber and dentist." who was also charged with snooting at his mistress in the Bois de Clamait. The woman escaped, and the prisoner assumed such an appearance of despair in court that the jury acquitted him.

The two men left the palace on foot and passed through the streets. It was very cold and the princes felt their hands cold in their thin gloves. Just then they happened to pass the stand of an old man who gained a livelihood by selling hot baked potatoes on the street.

"Here," said the Prince of Wales, laughing, "is a chance to warm our hands."

They stopped, bought four hot potatoes of the old man, thrust them info the side pockets of their overcosts, and went on warming their hands upon them.

The potato-seller bad recognized his patrons, and shortly afterwards the passers by were astonished and amused to see a large sign erected over his cart bearing the words:

POTATO MERCHANT TO THE PRINCE OF WALES.

The novelty of the title attracted a crowd, which increased and grew noisy when a policeman attempted to make the potato-seller remove the sign. The "merchant" insisted that as the Prince of Wales had patronized him he had a right to use the appelation.

The clerk said he believed something of the kind had occurred.

"I understand, too, that you are intending to secretly dispose of the remains," said the reporter.

This the clerk also almitted. Why? Because the deceased had no relatives, and as it was not pleasant to have the news of a saidle get out the best thing to do was to quietly get rid of the body.

"Where is the body now?" demanded the reporter.

The clerk thought it hadn't been cludown yet, the bag in which it was to be placed not having been brought.
